1977 Ford B700 School Bus

A SAFER JOURNEY

School buses are far safer today than the 11-year-old former school bus used by Radcliff Assembly of God on May 14, 1988. That bus was powered by gasoline. When drunken driver Larry Mahoney crashed into it, gasoline from its unprotected fuel tank ignited, causing a fire that blocked the front door, leaving the rear emergency exit — which was blocked by personal items — and small window openings as the only way out. Twenty-four children and three adults aboard were killed not by the impact but by the fire and the toxic smoke that filled the bus before they could escape.

Some safety regulations took effect April 1, 1977, just nine days after the bus was built, while others were mandated by Kentucky and the federal government after the Carroll County crash.
